

McKenzie Day began her dance training in Franklin, TN, and followed that passion through college and into her professional life. At Western Kentucky University, Day majored in Dance and English Literature and was a committee head of the student chapter of the National Dance Education Organization. After teaching at studios and schools in the Nashville area, she found her home in Memphis, where she feels honored to teach, train, and perform in this artistically rich area. Day is passionate about teaching dance in the school system and pioneered a program at a charter school in South Memphis. She also teaches tap and ballet for New Ballet outreach programs and choreographs for Graceland Performing Arts Camp. Miss McKenzie can't wait to share her passion for tap with the talented dancers of T. L. Williams Academy of Dance!
